NEXT in importance to the sacred Scriptures is the Hymn Book ; we read it, we sing from it, we memorize it, we apply it to our several states of experience, and are largely, though perhaps unconsciously, molded by its teachings. Nor is this to be regretted. "From the early days of the Christian Church down to our own time," says Mr. Stephen C. Drew, "men have put their highest thoughts and their best feelings into the form of hymns and anthems. Thus we have in them an embodiment of the love and faith, the aspiration and hope of those who have in times past and present set their faces heavenward, walking in the same path of temptation and difficulty which we are now treading. . . . We also read in Acts that Paul and Silas 'praised and sang praises to God' in the jail at Philippi. Paul, also, exhorts the brethren to sing 'psalms and hymns and spiritual songs;' and, again, in his Epistle to the Colossians, he says, 'teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs.'"

Our literature is exceedingly rich in holy song; indeed, so much so, as to render a complete collection, even of the best hymns, impracticable for general use. The Hymnal of the Methodist Episcopal Church certainly does not contain all the best hymns in our language, and yet we are free in saying we have not met any collection of hymns for public use equal to it.

Of all Christian bodies Methodism is especially indebted to sacred song; she had her birth in hymn singing, and lives only while she sings. Charles Wesley struck the key-note, not only of Methodism, but also of modern revivalism, in his famous lines:

To that Jerusalem above
With SINGING I repair,

which is being responded to by the Church universal in the words of an eminent contemporary of Wesley:

O tell of His might, and sing of his grace.

It is believed by some that in the great revival meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey the singing of the latter did more to arouse popular sympathy and earnestness than even the preaching of the former.

Nor has the use of hymns been confined alone to singing; they have also proved a powerful auxiliary in preaching. A single stanza from the lips of Whitefield filled the chapels of America and England with a blaze of enthusiasm, never to be forgotten; Benson's richest sermons were those in which poetic quotations chiefly abounded. In his celebrated sermon on the death of Mrs. Foster no fewer than eleven of those are found. The writer was present at a meeting some years ago which became a Pentecost at the recitation by a lady of that familiar verse:

And if our fellowship below
 In Jesus be so sweet,
 What height of rapture shall we know
 When round his throne we meet!

Of course there were reasons for this; it was uttered with power, it was highly appropriate, and was offered just at the proper moment.

Cruden has done more than any other to familiarize the student with the whole of Scripture; no work of analysis, or list of subjects, or index of chapters and verses, can supply the place of his admirable Concordance, for by it every line of Holy Writ stands out boldly before us. That work is universally regarded as indispensable in the study of the Bible.

How is it the Church has never had a Concordance to her hymns? A work that will open the treasures of the Hymn Book in the way that Cruden has opened the Scriptures? A work that will bring every line, yes, every important thought to our service? Indexes are valuable as far as they go, but who has not, over and again, found them totally inadequate and unsatisfactory? The truth is we have long needed a Concordance.

A minister of some note several years ago, in the preparation of one of his best sermons upon the redemptive work of Christ, desired to complete one of his finest sentences with an appropriate stanza. Reflecting a moment he exclaimed with delight, as Archimedes was accustomed to do upon solving a problem—"I've found it, I've found it!" Unlike Archimedes, however, he was doomed to disappointment, for being unable to recall any but the last line of the verse, his index, of course, was utterly unserviceable. That line was

The iron fetters yield.

In vain he strove to remember the first words of this stanza, in vain he searched and researched his Hymn Book for its hidden treasure; all was to no purpose, and, what was most to be regretted, his patience and inspiration had well-nigh departed. "That unfortunate occurrence," he afterward said, "almost cost me a Sabbath's usefulness." Has not this been the experience of thousands of others? Has it not been the experience of every minister in the Church? And now, in view of nearly four hundred hymns being added to the collection, will it not probably continue to be the experience of the future?

This will serve to show, at least in part, the utility of the Concordance we now offer the public. With this work no such difficulty need again occur. Let the reader try the facility with which this lost line is now recovered by simply turning to the word "fetters;" he will also find that that word, in its singular and plural form, occurs about eight times in the Hymnal, and that possibly some other stanza there referred to may be even more appropriate than the one he has selected.

But this Concordance is of still further use in the wise and judicious selection of hymns to be sung. It is true, we have an excellent "Index of Subjects," and yet there are hundreds of subjects preached upon not found in that Index. We have also a prudently arranged "Index of Scripture Texts," but there are thousands upon thousands of texts preached upon not found in that Index, and hence the usefulness of these Indexes is, of necessity, limited and unsatisfactory. This, however, is not the case with a Concordance which is limited only by the Hymnal itself.

A few examples will make this plain. Take 2 Tim. i, 12: "For the which cause I also suffer these things: nevertheless I am not ashamed; for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." We search in vain the "Index of Scripture Texts" for any reference whatever to this important text, and justly conclude that no hymn in the collection exactly suits it; but in this we are mistaken. Let us now try the Concordance upon either "ashamed" or "committed," and we are directed to number 595, to which we turn and find the following appropriate hymn:

1 I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,

Or to defend his cause;

Maintain the honor of his word,

The glory of his cross.

2 Jesus, my God! I know his name;

His name is all my trust;

Nor will he put my soul to shame,

Nor let my hope be lost.

3 Firm as his throne his promise stands,

And he can well secure

What I've committed to his hands,

Till the decisive hour.

Another example, Isa. xxxv, 4: "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you." This text is not found in the Index, nevertheless a hymn may be found to suit.

Turn to "fearful" or "strong" in the Concordance, and we are referred to hymn 479. Here it is:

1 Prisoners of hope, lift up your heads,
The day of liberty draws near!
Jesus, who on the serpent treads,
Shall soon in your behalf appear:
The Lord will to his temple come;
Prepare your hearts to make him room.

2 Ye all shall find, whom in his word
Himself hath caused to put your trust,
The Father of our dying Lord
Is ever to his promise just;
Faithful, if we our sins confess.
To cleanse from all unrighteousness.

3 O ye of fearful hearts, be strong!
Your downcast eyes and hands lift up!
Ye shall not be forgotten long;
Hope to the end, in Jesus hope!
Tell him ye wait his grace to prove;
And cannot fail, if God is love.

Again, no hymn is given in the Index to Matt. x, 16: "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." The words "serpents" and "dove," however, point in the Concordance to hymn 810, verse 3, which is based upon this very text:

Be wise as serpents, where you go,
But harmless as the peaceful dove;
And let your heaven-taught conduct show
Ye are commissioned from above.

The same is true of Gen. vi, 3: "And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man." "Strive," in the Concordance, points to hymn 353, verse 4:

God's Spirit will not always strive
With hardened, self-destroying man;
Ye, who persist his love to grieve,
May never hear his voice again.

We might employ examples almost without number, but one more will suffice, Luke xiv, 16-18: "Then said he unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many: and sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready. And they all with one consent began to make excuse," etc. Now, should a hymn be desired suitable to the invitation we are, very properly, pointed in the Index to number 364: "Come, sinners, to the gospel feast;" but should our subject be the excuses of sinners, also found in the above text, we are left in the dark for an appropriate hymn. But here, again, the Concordance comes to our assistance, and, under the word "excuses," refers us to one of the finest hymns in the entire collection, 834. What congregation can sing the following hymn after an appropriate sermon and not be influenced by it?

- 1 The King of heaven his table spreads,
And blessings crown the board;
Not paradise, with all its joys,
Could such delight afford.
- 2 Pardon and peace to dying men,
And endless life are given,
Through the rich blood that Jesus shed
To raise our souls to heaven.
- 3 Millions of souls, in glory now,
Were fed and feasted here;
And millions more, still on the way,
Around the board appear.
- 4 All things are ready, come away,
Nor weak EXCUSES frame;
Crowd to your places at the feast,
And bless the Founder's name.

Every minister of the gospel owes it to both his Lord and congregation to have his discourse followed, not only by an appropriate hymn, but by the most appropriate one in the collection. This is, indeed, indispensable to complete unity, strength, and success in preaching. We are led to hope that, to some extent at least, this desired end may be assisted by the work we now offer the Church.

At the end of this work will be found several Indexes, to the importance of which we will now call attention.

First in order, and immediately associated with the Concordance, is the "Consecutive Index," arranged according to number. The utility of this index may be best explained as follows:

The preacher, having chosen his text, desires the most appropriate hymn to follow his sermon; the hymn in which occurs "The iron fetters yield" is the one desired. He turns to "fetters" and finds that hymn to be 185. Three inquiries may now arise in his mind. Hymns, like individuals, are best known by their faces—the face of a hymn is its first line—hence he asks, 1. What hymn is it? 2. Of what meter is it? and, as the old Hymn Book will, in all probability, be in use for some years to come in many of the churches, 3. Where is it found in the old book? All these inquiries are immediately answered in the "Consecutive Index" by simply running the eye down the page to number 185. Here it is:

185 C. Hark, the glad sound! the Saviour comes, 118.

Here he at once recognizes this as an old and familiar hymn; its meter is "common," and, as indicated by the figures on the right, its number is 118 in the old book. In this way the face of the hymn, the meter, and position in the old book (if found there) of every reference in the Concordance can be immediately known.

The second is the "Alphabetical Index," the use of which will abridge the reader's labor if he is already in possession of the first line of the hymn, but not its number, meter, and position in the old book.

The "Metrical Index" will prove of great service when the meter of the hymn is a matter of importance—and there are no fewer than seventy-four varieties of meter in the Hymnal.

How often is the preacher requested to select a hymn within a certain meter, to which some newly-learned or old familiar tune may be sung, and how great is sometimes his embarrassment in finding one that will at once suit both tune and discourse. This embarrassment is entirely obviated by the use of the "Metrical Index," in which any meter is found at a glance, with all hymns thereto belonging arranged in alphabetical order. This Index will be especially appreciated by choirs and by all persons having charge of public singing. When it is also more generally understood that some well-known tune is suited to a number of excellent hymns not generally used, it will extend the influence of the collection as a whole, as well as to greatly add to the freshness of the services.

Our last is an "Index of Hymns found in the Hymnal, not in the Hymn Book, and of hymns in the Hymn Book not used in the Hymnal." In this Index will be seen about 375 hymns, now in use, not found in the old book, and also a few more than this number dropped from service. Among the "dropped" hymns will be recognized some of the "good old hymns our fathers sang;" these hymns, however, were not dropped because they had fallen from grace, but because—like our fathers themselves—having nobly served their day they were honorably laid to rest.

One word more. With the Bible in her right hand and the Hymnal in her left, Methodism has nothing to fear in her grand march to battle and victory. Cried the illustrious hero of her ecclesiastical existence, "The best of all is, God is with us!" and the unbroken history of one hundred and fifty years but sustains this claim. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Let, then, the battle-cry of Martin Luther—the sequel of that of his campaign against Worms—ever be sung "in Spirit and in truth," and all will be well unto the end of time.

And though this world, with devils filled,
Should threaten to undo us;
We will not fear, for God hath willed
His truth to triumph through us.

 306 Ere life and h. forever fly
 308 With trembling h. I see
 313 Whence h. and comfort flow
 353 Then h. may never beam on
 391 Whose h., still hovering round
 394 Already springing h. I feel
